

Cyprus Declaration

A call for reviving a shared European identity

During a recent meeting, held in Nicosia, the members of YUFE's Strategic Council expressed their concerns about ongoing political developments, noting a growing apathy towards Europe and opposition to the idea of a shared European identity and values.

It is our duty...

as an Alliance of ten young European universities to play a key role in paving the way towards an egalitarian, open and socially inclusive European future. We are fully committed to educate the next generation of learners, guiding them with European values. To ensure that Europe remains competitive and independent in a globalised world, we cannot risk a European continent being fragmented into small imaginative parts not following the same set of principles. In our daily work, we experience that we are even stronger together – as universities, societies and countries.

YUFE therefore strongly urges...

the revival of a shared European identity centred on democracy and social inclusion, embracing the rich diversity our continent has to offer. We live in an exceptional democracy that ensures an economically and socially safe environment for the generations to come. We simply cannot afford to put this safety net in jeopardy. As a European Universities Alliance and convinced Europeans, we strive to be part of a countermovement to the evolving anti-European sentiments.

To fulfil our societal mission...

not only as a lighthouse for the future of European Higher Education, but also for the future of the European youth, we call on the continued and sustainable support. European universities play a pivotal role in educating their students to be open-minded, highly skilled, prepared for the job market, making them central to a united, peaceful and prosperous Europe. Continuous support will allow us to be a steady base in an unsteady political landscape.
